The basic premise of data protection law is that individuals are responsible for the personal data that they generate or collect and that they must therefore take appropriate steps to protect that data from their own negligence. It is the responsibility of the individual to ensure that they have the necessary information to consent to data collection or that it is collected lawfully.

Individual rights and obligations Article 12 The data subject is the person about whom the personal data is collected, it is the data subject that has the right to request erasure, rectification, restriction of processing, and objection to the processing. The data subject has the right to object to processing based on a legitimate interest for scientific or historical research purposes, or the purpose of storing, processing, and transferring data in an automated manner.

Citing the example of a family. This paper will focus on the legal rights of individuals and on the concepts of privacy and data protection. The subject of privacy was the original driving force behind the development of data protection law.

Increasingly with the advent of the Internet, the location of the personal data being collected and the types of personal data are of growing interest.

3 4 Some definitions A data controller is a person who collects and processes personal data, including for this purpose, a data processor is a person who has a contract with a data controller, and any recipient of personal data. A user is a person who accesses the data.

5 Personal data is information that relates to an identified or identifiable natural person. In other words, personal data are data that are about a particular person, and not about a general class of persons. Privacy is the protection of personal data. A person is the data subject, that is, the person whose personal data is being collected or processed.

6 Privacy is an important right. Privacy safeguards individual dignity and self-respect. Individuals have the right to remain, or to be forgotten.

7 Individuals have a right to be forgotten, which is a right that is closely linked with the right to be forgotten in the European Union. The right to be forgotten is a human right and is regulated under Article 17 of the European Convention on Human Rights

8 6. Every state party to the European Convention on Human Rights guarantees the right to privacy.

9 The right to privacy is the right of every person, whether living within or outside the State, to respect for his private life, correspondence, home and the refusal of interference. In the context of the European Convention on Human Rights, the right to privacy includes the right to protection of personal data.
