Apolipoprotein J (ApoJ) is a mammalian homologue of the apolipoprotein E (ApoE) family of secreted, lipoprotein-associated molecules that function in cholesterol transport. To date, ApoJ has been associated primarily with the regulation of signal transduction in peripheral tissues and in liver, but not in the central nervous system (CNS). The experiments reported here demonstrate that ApoJ is expressed in the brain and that it is localized to the brain endothelium and the glia, as well as neurons, in both the developing and adult. Post-natally, ApoJ is transiently expressed in astrocytes and is a hallmark of cerebrovascular lesions, particularly those of Alzheimer's disease. Gene expression studies suggest that ApoJ expression is modulated during aging and in Alzheimer's disease. ApoJ modulates the activity of interleukin-1alpha, the inducible isoform of nitric oxide synthase, and the expression of the low-density lipoprotein receptor, all of which are implicated in neurodegeneration and in Alzheimer's disease. The findings described here provide a new perspective on ApoJ as a possible protective agent for CNS neurons, particularly in the face of degenerative events that are associated with aging and Alzheimer's disease.
