The actors of the film, Abhishek Bachchan, Tota Kapoor, Malaika Arora and others do their best to lure viewers with the acting. The end result is an extremely glamorous movie with beautiful costumes and sumptuous set design. Abhishek Bachchan and Malaika Arora as lovers, make the viewer feel as if he/she is living the dream. One thing that is clear in the film is the true love story that is missing in many Indian movies. A film that shows the way a common man can be made into a billionaire after the money that he has earned is declared as tax-free. Aamir Khan, in the lead role, does an excellent job. He plays the role of an honest honest man, Jai Maan (as he is called), who suffers the humiliation of the tax authorities and of being accused of corruption. What would have been an ordinary man's story is made into a well-crafted movie. The end result is a very well-written and executed film. Aamir Khan, one of the finest filmmakers, does not make any film that is entirely on the lines of his earlier films. His last film, Gangaaajal, was written in the style of his earlier films. In this film, he is completely new to the way in which he has been writing his scripts. The line of dialogues is totally different from the ones he has been using in his earlier films. In Aamir's own words in a special interview "The government says that I earn money out of the black money, I make movies with black money. People say that I have no right to comment on the government, it's only the police who have the right, I also have no right to comment on the government". Karan Johar, who has been a frequent maker of comedy in the Bollywood, has always been creative in the making of movies. He has a very open mind in his approach to the script, both in dialogues and direction. The most important aspect of the movie is the song "Rab Ne Bana Di Jodi". The special dance routine by Abhishek Bachchan is very meaningful. The haunting music by Sandeep Chowta, the stylish song "Bachpan Ke Bajao" will surely strike a chord with the audience.
