A method for efficient interpolation in two- and three-dimensional time-resolved data of proton-induced ionization and molecular de-excitation. To enhance the efficiency of efficient interpolation in proton-induced ionization and molecular de-excitation measurements by the PARIS experimental setup [H. A. Dürr, H. R. Schneider, J. Straub, and J. B. Gerber, Nucl. Instrum. Methods Phys. Res., Sect. B [**133**]{}, 476 (1997)] we present a new method. This new method is based on measuring at least the total energy loss in the two-dimensional (dE/dx, E) or three-dimensional (dE/dx, E, Q2) signal and applying a three-dimensional interpolation to data obtained in the same measurement. Interpolation in dE/dx, E data can be done by a linear interpolation between the points recorded on the detector. In dE/dx, E and Q2 data it is more efficient to apply a new interpolation method. Here we use a multidimensional Hermite interpolation with a weight function which was fitted to a function describing the dE/dx, E-dependent emission angle distribution. This weight function also increases the signal/noise ratio in the dE/dx, E, Q2 data. The efficiency of the new interpolation method is evaluated for dE/dx, E data. The applicability of the new method is demonstrated for data of H+ ions recorded with a thin foil ion target and liquid target.
