Liver samples of wild boar (Sus scrofa scrofa) hunted in Czechia in the period from 2003 to 2006 were analyzed for metal contents in a total of 1004 samples.

The results of copper and zinc concentrations were compared with those published earlier for boar from the Czech Republic. Cadmium levels were also investigated for the first time in wild boar liver. Cadmium, copper, and zinc concentrations in wild boar liver were in the same range as in boar from other European countries, with the exception of Czech Republic ( $CCd = 0.33 \pm 0.24$  mg/kg,  $CEC = 6.44 \pm 3.78$  mg/kg,  $CZn = 1.48 \pm 0.71$  mg/kg), where these metals were of medium concentration. Copper and zinc concentrations were on average twice as high as in Bohemia and Czech Republic. The concentration of cadmium was low in wild boar liver and did not differ statistically significantly from levels of the Czech Republic. The results of the present study indicate that dietary pathways are the main sources of metals in the liver of wild boar from Czechia.
