Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a stage apparatus used for an exposure apparatus which exposes a substrate such as a wafer or a reticle via a projection optical system, and a projection exposure apparatus including the stage apparatus. 2. Description of the Related Art A conventional projection exposure apparatus used to expose a wafer or the like includes a wafer stage that moves the wafer in X- and Y-directions with respect to a projection optical system. A reaction force from the wafer stage is transmitted through a structure around the stage apparatus such as a stage base, a stationary member, and a driven member, and transmitted to the building structure. This is referred to as a mass-production effect. In recent years, as demand for high precision semiconductor devices increases, a stage apparatus used in the projection exposure apparatus is required to reduce a resonance frequency (f), which is determined by the natural frequency of the stage apparatus. In order to reduce the resonance frequency of the stage apparatus, the stage apparatus may be downsized. If the stage apparatus is downsized, however, it becomes difficult to reduce the mass-production effect. That is, the rigidity of the wafer stage is reduced, and the rigidity of the building structure supporting the wafer stage is also reduced. When the rigidity of the building structure is reduced, the reaction force from the wafer stage increases. In a first aspect of the present invention, a stage apparatus includes a stage base including a stationary member that supports a movable member thereon, a stage movable in a first direction parallel to a surface of a substrate supported by the movable member, a reaction force generating mechanism that generates a reaction force acting on the movable member in 2d92ce491b
