There is nothing wrong with that and it's an important part of the iPad's overall appeal to me. I like cases that are way more than just a glorified cover-like thing you glue on your iPad or a screen protector. So I'm pretty shocked to hear that the iPhone 6 would have a case that is essentially three things - a screen protector, a screen protector and a cover. As you might have read, the iPhone 6+ has the new glass back that most people were expecting, which also changes what I feel the phone should look like. With a more concave design, we could probably have a really nice looking iPhone 6 "case" that would look way better than what Apple currently sells. A different case design could be all we need to keep the design on the iPhone 6 more concave and slightly out of the way. Apple could make a standard iPad case that has an iPhone 6-sized cutout on the side. All in all, this would make the iPhone 6 case much more interesting. I'm still not sure if I'd personally be happy with this case but I want to know if Apple would make it. I would think that Apple would change the design of the iPhone 6 to avoid any additional design changes, but I would be interested to hear what you guys think. The best design for the iPhone 6 case will be the one that doesn't have any additional cases on top of the iPhone 6 but will still be able to protect the glass back design. We still have one more week to see the new iPhone and really we should take a bit of time to think about what it could look like. If an Apple accessory designer came up with a way to design an iPhone case that sort of looks like an iPad mini case, that would be pretty
