----- PDF format comes in two types: Portable Document Format (PDF) and PostScript Formatted Portable Document Format (PDF) is designed to be a way of sharing and printing the contents of electronic documents. PDF was created by Adobe Systems in the early 1990s and is more convenient than PostScript when printing, viewing and creating PDF documents because PDF files are not printer-specific like PostScript documents. • PDF is the only cross-platform, cross-application electronic document format available • More attractive than PostScript for producing documents by authoring applications. • Can be displayed by most programs that support PDF • PDF (Portable Document Format) documents are smaller than PostScript documents, so they use less system resources PostScript format is very powerful, allowing you to manipulate pages and create new graphics within the same document. PostScript is an application programming interface (API) that enables any application to create PostScript documents. PostScript documents consist of any combination of text, graphics, tables, layout, and page numbering. • The PostScript language was developed in the late 1980s by Adobe Systems Incorporated in conjunction with its Acrobat software. The PostScript language was designed to enable the creation of high-quality documents that can be quickly and easily printed by desktop printers. • The PostScript language is different from other languages in the way that you produce a document. Rather than producing a document, PostScript produces a description of how a document should look. • The combination of PostScript, PostScript fonts, and Acrobat renders a document on the screen and prints it out. • Used by Acrobat to display its pages in 3D • Acrobat recognizes PostScript fonts, and enables you to draw with them in any application • Used by Adobe Draw, Photoshop, and other creative software • The combination of PostScript, PostScript fonts, and Acrobat renders a document on the screen and prints it out • Can be printed by any printer. Even those without PostScript support • Printed documents are usually smaller than those in other formats PDF is designed

He played in four Twenty20 Internationals (T20Is) for Australia in 2010. Life and career Parer was born in Sydney, and spent his childhood in the city. He attended Sydney Church of England Grammar School, where he played for the school's first XI and captained the second XI in 2003 and 2004. An all-rounder, Parer was known for his underarm fast-medium spin, and would bowl at an average of over 85 mph (135 km/h). After spending his secondary school years at the Marist Brothers College Ashgrove, Parer attended the University of New South Wales, where he studied economics. He made his first-class debut for the New South Wales Blues in the 2002–03 and 2004–05 seasons, playing eight first-class matches. The following season, he moved to Brisbane and joined the Queensland Bulls' Academy, and was given a rookie contract with the Bulls, to play in the State Championship, the domestic one-day competition. At the end of the 2005–06 season, Parer was included in the Bulls' 15-man squad for the 2006–07 season, after impressing in his debut season. He scored his maiden first-class century in the 2006–07 season, in a match against South Australia. The following season, he scored his first century in List A cricket, when he hit a career-best 128* against the Western Warriors. Parer had a successful 2008–09 season, in which he hit scores of 70, 92 and 95 runs in successive matches for Queensland. Following the Bulls' loss in the 2009 Champions League, where they finished runners-up to Victoria, Parer was picked for the 2009–10 season, and he scored his maiden first-class century in the same season, when he hit 108* against the New South Wales Blues. Parer hit three successive fifties (44*, 67* and 61*) in the 2009–10 Sheffield
