The cruelest thing I ever did to myself was to wait too long before I started writing "human-centric excel" which became a full time job! ----- uw_rob Now that I think about it, one way to solve this is to figure out how to create a hardware brain in a box, and then have a parallel processing machine such that you can train models on the boxes to make smarter models. I can't say I've thought about it enough to know how that would actually be done, but it would solve many of the problems described in the article. ~~~ jswanson You'd probably need an organic brain first. ~~~ uw_rob I meant a hardware brain. A hard coded brain could be pretty powerful as well ~~~ jswanson A hardware brain is not impossible, but doesn't have the same flexibility. ----- elihu This has been known for a long time: from the Adagio. [1] I wonder how many people have been interested in it but have put it aside, because it was one of those things that you could look into but decided it wasn't really "real" AI. [1] [ ~~~ nols The Adagio was actually an early version of a number of the techniques used by deepmind's approach. ----- ZenPsycho most of the technology described here is available in Sigmoid and in the PowersOfTen.net library (and has been for some time), and has been in the wild for a number of years. ~~~ kumarski It
