Adobe Photoshop CS3 Keygen

Q: How to publish source code of keygen used to crack MD2/MD4 i cracked MD2/MD4 and MD5 some years ago and published them. the software i wrote is open-source and hosted on Sourceforge. now some years later somebody cracked md5/md4/md2. of course the software used to crack the hash will be published too. my question is, what i do to prevent this? how to publish my software so i can't be cheated by someone who bought the cracked software instead of buying software to crack the MD2/MD4/MD5 he should buy? i doubt that my software is secure enough, since i cracked MD4/MD5 anyway and since the used software is cracked too. sorry for my bad english. A: Open-source projects are not defined by how many people are involved (or how secure they are), but rather by how easily one can verify that the project is true, open, and properly licensed. You could try to sue the person who published the key cracking software, but the problem is that you have no idea who he is (you haven't even released your name, so he can use that as an anonymity cloak), so any judge will throw out the case after having looked at that. If you want to sue someone, sue them by their IP address. So, to prevent people from buying cracked software, instead of actually selling the software, just ask for money upfront and do a site visit to make sure that the user follows your conditions (either directly or through a service like Trustpilot). A: With sourceforge, you will have to "sign up" to maintain the license, and register a copy of the source code. If the cracked code differs from your own, you can then request the user to change his copy. This is how the sourceforge terms ask users to behave, and the way that they do do it. By the way, there are plenty of free software toolkits to reverse-engineer cryptographic algorithms and tools. It's fun! A: The simple answer to this is to create a web page that provides the hash of your keygen, along with the original, and links to the original. That way the cracker has a single place to go to verify that you are who you say you are. I would look for something a little more complicated, like a sandbox

Q: Creating a List of Spices I need to be able to set a list of Spices (which are objects) I have a class that is declared as public class Spice : IDrinkable So I have created an instance of the class and tried to set it as such var s = new Spice(); s.Name = "Spice Name"; but it doesn't seem to work. The full code is: using System; using System.Collections.Generic; using System.Linq; using System.Text; using System.Threading.Tasks; namespace Project { public class SampleSpice { public string Name { get; set; } public int Quantity { get; set; } public float PricePerUnit { get; set; } public decimal TotalPrice { get; set; } public int ID { get; set; } public String Description { get; set; } public float Temp { get; set; } public String Origin { get; set; } } public class Event { public string Name { get; set; } public string Description { get; set; } public Spice[] Spices { get; set; } public float Cost { get; set; } public int Count { get; set; } public int Quantity { get; set; } public int MaxQuantity { get; set; } public float PricePerUnit { get; set; } } public class Drinker : IDrinkable { public string Name { get; set; } public int MaxQuantity { get; set; } set
