The NMDA-receptor antagonist, memantine, is currently being developed for use in the treatment of Alzheimer's disease. Animal studies have suggested an effect of memantine on bingeing behavior. This study is a randomized, double-blind, crossover study in which 20 patients with chronic alcoholism will be treated with placebo or memantine for eight weeks. Patients will be allowed to drink normally during the trial, and then at the end of treatment will be instructed to drink as much as they want to in order to obtain the effects of a high. It is hypothesized that memantine will reduce the number of drinks consumed to obtain this high. The overall objective of the research program is to understand the mechanism by which the two soluble forms of calcium channel dihydropyridine receptors regulate the function of the myocardial dihydropyridine receptor. A unique combination of techniques will be employed. These include the use of photolabile analogues of dihydropyridine receptor ligands such as BAY K 8644 and the application of a new anti-sense strategy for the synthesis of isoform-specific antibodies to the different dihydropyridine receptors. The hypothesis to be tested is that the different characteristics of the two soluble, Ca++-binding membrane proteins (the alpha- subunits) influence receptor- ligand interactions, and ultimately functional expression in cardiac muscle. The specific aims of the research plan are: a) to ascertain whether the mechanism for the translocation of the alpha-subunits from the membrane to the cytosol differs for BAY K 8644 and PN 200-110; b) to compare pharmacological properties of BAY K 8644 and PN 200-110; and c) to identify the alpha-subunit isoform present on the sarcoplasmic reticular dihydropyridine receptor. An old medical saying "All that glitters is not gold" applies to patients as well as to anything else that we value. It is never too late to reduce this burden of caregiving for patients. This article explores a new paradigm of redesigning the bedside, based on the nurses' responsibility for all aspects of the environment, the role of the nurse in an expanded team concept that will reduce some of the burden of caregiving and the need for family members to be able to cope when they become members of the team.
