available. Well, to the best of my recollection it was only available to paid subscribers (forums are a more advanced feature in that sense) but anyways, as this forum has been mostly abandoned by the community, I'm giving it a shot and maybe you all will find it useful. Share this post Link to post Share on other sites somebody should make a dedicated game multiplayer client for Linux. It should support teams, voice chat, skype-like functionality and many other features. There's been a Linux client for a long time available for Windows/OSX. It's also pretty new to Linux and can't be compared to the windows one, due to huge limitations in terms of functionality, player support and the fact that it uses the highly restrictive and closed MediaTomb protocol. This means that players are forced to be behind a firewall and are not allowed to use this client in the cloud (which almost everyone does nowadays). You can get a Windows 10/7 based version from the Windows client, however it still uses this MediaTomb protocol and it's still a rather simple application. Also, while it does support Steam groups, teammates, voice chat and similar
